SUGAR CERTIFICATES REQUIRED

Manufacturer to Submit Statement of Amount Due Him.

No manufacturer using sugar in his products is permitted, after last Wednesday, to purchase sugar without the surrender of an authorized sugar distribution certificate. Manufacturers in all cities of the state except St. Louis and Kansas City may obtain certificates from the office of the State Food Administration in Columbia upon the delivery of a required sworn statement showing the amount of sugar to which they are entitled.

This rationing plan requires each manufacturer to make out a statement of the amount of sugar used last year, and upon this statement sugar certificates will be issued. Preservers and packers of vegetables, catsup and chili sauce, fruit, milk, jelly and preserves, meat and ice cream, excluding sherbet and water ices, may have 100 per cent allowances.

NAVY WINS RESPECT OF M. U. GRADUATE

F. M. Williams, B. J. '17, Writes of Trip Across and of Conditions in France.

SAW TWO U-BOATS

Praises Y. M. C. A.—Says Prices are High Especially to Americans.

Frederick M. Williams, B. J. '17, now a lieutenant in the Army Signal School of the Twentieth Field Artillery, American Expeditionary Forces, writes that the Navy won his deep respect on the way across. The destroyers of the convoy were so camouflaged that they were hard to see at a distance.

"We saw two submarines on the trip," he writes. "The destroyers sighted one yesterday but did not fire at it. They saw one this morning and fired two depth bombs at it and hit it. One destroyer stayed back where it had dropped the charge and reported that oil appeared to spread all over the water. The charges exploded this morning about 2,000 yards from the ship, and the shock, even at that distance, nearly shook us out of bed. We all turned white and thought we were torpedoed for sure."

In a later letter he writes: "For the last three days I have been digging trenches just like an ordinary laborer, and it has rained every day. Believe me, it is no fun transferring one part of France from one spot to another in a drizzling rain, where the dirt is like glue. They make us use the French shovels and picks, which are shaped like a board and have no American crook in them by which to get a leverage."

Lives in Historic, Fortified Town.

"This is an old historic, fortified town and about as far from being modern as you can imagine. It is entirely surrounded by an immense wall which reminds me of what I have read about the Chinese wall."

"They have wonderful watches here and they are not as expensive as ours. I have been near the Swiss border and have seen some wonderful watches there."

"We have fair food for five francs a day. Some of them say we are eating horse meat, but it tastes like good old tough beef to me, which I am sure it is."

"The commissary here sells some American candy, tobacco, soap, etc. The Y. M. C. A. also has a limited stock of American goods. Believe me, since I came over here I am far the Y. M. strong. It is on the job here and is the soldiers' delight."

here if possible. We have to get the mayor's permission to do so. The French beds are great, soft feather beds and have plenty of cover. I refer to those of the hotels and houses. Out at the camp we have only a layer of boards for the men, with straw-filled bed sacks. We officers have our cots and the bedding rolls we brought with us. I prefer the private house. "Light wine is the national drink in this country. It is weak and practically a non-intoxicant. Pure water seems hard to get in certain parts of France. I never knew there was so much wine and beer in the world. We passed cars and cars of it on the trains, some in gigantic kegs and others in boxed bottles. It is cheap too, selling for three or four francs a bottle.

Street Crooked; Sidewalks Narrow. "I don't know whether I spoke about the streets here in France. None run more than a block in a straight line. The pavement is of cobble stones and what sidewalks there are are very narrow. The right side of the street appears to be the proper side to pass on. In England the left side is used entirely.

"There are no large stores—all small shops. They sell nearly everything. Before the Americans came, prices were very low but they are up now, especially to us. They charge $1.80 for cleaning and pressing a suit and $2 for an average laundry. Besides, the work doesn't compare with what we expect in the States. There are no steam laundries, and their methods of cleaning are primitive.

"The barbers are mostly women who can't give a decent hair cut.

"The officers nearly all wear soft caps. The breeches you buy here are heavy and fine. I wish I hadn't bought so many things at home.

"The stoves all burn wood, which seems to be plentiful here. They are French stoves though, so you can imagine what a crude affair they are.

"The French people are all polite, especially when they charge you three prices for something. The French girls are watched by their parents, who do not allow them to speak to a stranger. I refer to the respectable class. The others run wild. But the United States authorities are very strict here and have military police everywhere. You take your life in your hands if you even speak to a questionable girl."

Prize for Best Prohibition Oration. A prize of $50 will be awarded to the successful contestant in the state prohibition oratorical contest to be held May 30, at Parkville, Mo. The winner will represent the state in the interstate contest to be held June 10 at Hastings, Neb.
